

What are your 2022 summer goals?

Everyone wants to accomplish something over summer, here are some.

By: Erin Behrmann

When it comes to summer goals, there are a variety. You may think what could I do in just 2 months? You would be surprised with what you could accomplish. Teachers and students create these goals in order to get something done when school isn't occurring.

Some goals could be: going to the gym more, eating better, traveling the world, getting your license or permit, doing summer reading, getting tan, trying a new hobby, and so much more.

Whereas some may focus on something other than school, others may attend college over the summer.

"My goal is to not get lost in college and pass my classes. I will start at USF over summer and will major in Biology, which I am excited for," Valeria Marrero-Ruiz ('22) said.

While some are off to college, some teachers get a break from their students and try to fit as much as they can into this break.

"I do a lot over summer. I workout a lot more, I write at least 50,000-100,000 words for a book that I'm working towards, and this summer I have really big life decisions to make, but I will keep those to myself," Mr. Christopher Dahl said.

Other students might try to even balance school and social life. Have you ever been to a concert? Maybe you could add that to your list.

"I am trying to hit 60 concerts by the end of summer, and I plan to take classes at SPC to furthermore educate myself and get closer to my nursing degree," Mya Tzemopoulos ('22) said.

Lastly, here are the goals for our 2 senior co-editors and chiefs in newspaper.

"My goals over summer change everyday, however, right now I would like to bench 150, dead lift 320, and squat 245. In school I hope to figure my new campus out and get to know more people," Erin Behrmann ('22) said.

"My goal is to do as much as possible and have fun before I leave for college," Allyson May ('22) said.

Everyone has some kind of goal, either a small or life changing goal that could be retrieved over summer. Take this time off to relax and find what you want to get done.

Seeing into the Future

By: Cassie Santella

As seniors are off to their future plans, juniors are moving up to the top position as seniors.

Now what do they have to say about their future? And what advice could they pass down to sophomores, freshmen, and even the new juniors.

Q: What are you most excited for/looking forward to for senior year?

A: "I'm excited for senior celebrations and the graduation!

I'm also looking forward to starting the next chapter in my life," Sabrina Hemani ('23) said.

A: "I'm looking forward to the five minutes we get for lunch," Catalina Velasco ('23) said.

A: "Enjoying the last moments with everyone," Kelly Tran ('23) said.

A: "One last year hanging out with my friends and hopefully I will stay friends with them after graduation," Irfan Ljubuncic ('23) said.

A: "I'm looking forward to the tea in Mr. Bradley's room," Hunter Bruce ('23) said.

A: "I'm excited for varsity soccer," Farhan Mardhani ('23) said.

Q: "Do you have any advice for underclassmen?"

A: "Live in the moment," Lucas Weaver ('23) said.

A: "To not care too much about what other people may think of you and do things that you want to do purely based off of what you enjoy," Zoe Pukas ('23) said.

A: "Sometimes it's the journey that teaches you a lot about your destination," Aakash Prahdan ('23) said.

A: "My biggest piece of advice would be to actually do all of your homework and keep up with your work. My second piece of advice would be to get to know your teachers and form connections with them. Lastly, get involved with different extracurriculars and most importantly take care of yourself!" Arriana Sanders ('23) said.
